Financial Management Track

Track Chairs:

- Konstantinos Bozos, University of Leeds, UK
- Felix Irresberger, Durham University, UK
- Hossein Jahanshahloo, Cardiff University, UK
- Laima Spokeviciute, Cardiff University, UK

The Financial Management track provides a forum for academics and practitioners interested in financial and related professional services along with the impact of finance on management practice and research. It aims to encourage interdisciplinary thinking and collaboration across fields that span corporate finance, management, international business, regulation, decision sciences and economics. It welcomes empirical, methodological, and theoretical research that has a focus on the firm or the manager as the principal unit of analysis. Papers need to have clearly identified managerial or firm governance implications.

For BAM2024, we are particularly interested in contributions examining the inclusive role of digital advancements, including machine learning (ML), artificial intelligence (AI), blockchain technologies, and financial technology and innovation within the context of digital and green transformation. Contributions on the interfaces of the digital transformation agenda and green financial policy as well as corporate governance are particularly welcome. We also welcome theoretical and empirical work on green finance, carbon accounting and green credentials, as well as any work tapping on behavioural and institutional interpretations of firm decisions. Finally, studies on the increasing role of private equity and venture capitals in financial markets, especially within the context of corporate social responsibility and performance, are warmly invited.
