Anaemic global growth, severe income disparity and ethical breaches have cast concern that management education models are flawed. In this provocative book, Thomas and Harney convincingly argue that the main issue is the lack of integration of the liberal arts into management curricula. They call for a rethinking, not only of business education but of how universities structure their curricula in all areas. This book should be required reading for all academics; it will undoubtedly change the way faculty think about educating the next generation of leaders.

ANDREW J. POLICANO
Professor Emeritus, The Paul Merage School of Business, University of California–Irvine
Author of From Ivory Tower to Glass House: Strategies for Academic Leaders During Turbulent Times

‘A major contribution for the reinvention of business schools, and higher education at large, by two of the most prominent experts in the sector. This book centres the future debate for the mission of business educators and the essence of management science.’

SANTIAGO ÍNIGUEZ DE ONZOÑO
President, IE University

Cover image: A low angle shot of the flower dome taken at the Garden by the Bay, at Marina Bay, Singapore. Art at its best! / Moment Open / Getty Images.

Cover designed by Hart McLeod Ltd